NINETY-THIRD CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

AT THE SECOND SESSION

Begun and held at the City of Washington on Monday, the twenty-first day of January, one thousand nine hundred and seventy-four

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed, as a House document, a revised edition of the House document "Our American Government. What Is It? How Does It Work?"; and that five hundred and sixty-five thousand additional copies be printed, of which four hundred and forty-two thousand shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and one hundred and three thousand shall be for the use of the Senate, and twenty thousand shall be for the use of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Attest:

W. PAT JENNINGS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
FRANCIS R. VALEO,
Secretary of the Senate.

FOREWORD

The content of this document was largely selected from a book I compiled, entitled, "Our American Government and How It Works—1001 Questions and Answers," which takes the reader on a personal tour, in question-and-answer form, of our Government and Nation's Capital. I am indebted to the publishers for the privilege of using material from the book.

This shorter version answers many of the questions Members of Congress receive from their constituents, and has much information not readily available elsewhere in such compact form, such as listings of Congressional and Executive Department officials, the Chairmen of Standing Committees, and Joint and Select Committees and complete state delegations of Senators and Representatives, the latter also being listed by Congressional District.

It is my hope that its popular, easy-to-follow quiz style will inspire many a pleasant and profitable family evening spent in the fascinating pastime of discovering what makes our democracy work.

I am also hopeful that this document, "Our American Government. What Is It? How Does It Function?" will encourage every reader to take an active interest in his Government—for the responsibility of making democracy work rests with the people.

WRIGHT PATMAN,
Member of Congress From Texas.

OUR AMERICAN GOVERNMENT

DEMOCRACY AND ITS AMERICAN SOURCES

1. What is the purpose of the American Government?

The purpose is expressed in the preamble to the Constitution: "We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

2. What form of government do we have in the United States?

With the exception of town meetings, a form of pure democracy, we have at the local, state, and national levels a democratic, representative, republican form of government. It is "democratic" because the people govern themselves; "representative" because they do so through elected representatives chosen by ballot; and "republican" because the government derives its powers from the people.

3. What were the Articles of Confederation?

The Articles of Confederation were a framework of national government which the Continental Congress agreed upon on Nov. 17, 1777. This was proposed to the legislatures of all the states with a circular letter, recommending the Articles as containing the only plan of union which stood a chance of being adopted by the separate states. Thus, if the states approved, they could authorize their delegates in Congress to ratify the Articles.

By March 1, 1781, the Articles had been ratified by all thirteen states and on the following day Congress assembled under the new form of government.

4. What contributions has our country made to the institution of government?

Some of the American contributions to the institution of government are as follows: a written constitution, an independent judiciary to interpret it, and division of powers between the Federal and state governments.

5. What were the six basic principles on which the Constitution was framed?

The Fathers of the Constitution agreed, without dispute, to six basic principles:

1. It was understood that all states would be equal. The national Government cannot give special privileges to one state.

commonly discussed—freedom of religion, speech, and press—the rights include:

- Right to assemble, and to petition Congress (amendment 1)
- Right to bear arms (amendment 2)
- Right not to have soldiers quartered in one's home in peacetime, except as prescribed by law (amendment 3)
- Right to be secure against "unreasonable searches and seizures" (amendment 4)
- Right in general not to be held to answer criminal charges except upon indictment (amendment 5)
- Right not to be put twice in jeopardy for the same offense (amendment 5)
- Right not to be compelled to be a witness against oneself (amendment 5)
- Right not to be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law (amendment 5)
- Right to just compensation for private property, taken for public use (amendment 5)
- Right, in criminal prosecution, to trial by a jury—to be notified of the charges, to be confronted with witnesses, to have compulsory process for calling witnesses, and to have legal counsel (amendment 6)
- Right to a jury trial in suits at law involving over twenty dollars (amendment 7)
- Right not to have excessive bail required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted (amendment 8)

10. How may the Constitution be amended?

Amendments may be proposed on the initiative of Congress (by two-thirds vote in each House) or by convention (on application of two-thirds of the State legislatures). So far, there has never been a convention called under this authority. Ratification may, at the discretion of Congress, be either by the legislatures or by conventions, in three-fourths of the States. As of the adjournment of the 92d Congress, the 21st amendment is the only one to have been ratified by State conventions.

The first 10 amendments were practically a part of the original instrument (being ratified in 1791), the 11th amendment was ratified in 1795, and the 12th amendment in 1804. Thereafter, no amendment was added to the Constitution for 60 years. After the Civil War, three amendments were ratified (1865-70), followed by another long interval before the 16th amendment became effective in 1913.

The most recent amendment, the 26th, was ratified on July 1, 1971. It lowered the voting age to 18 for Federal, State, and local elections. At present one amendment is pending before the States, to provide equal rights for men and women. As of August 1974, thirty-three of the required thirty-eight States had ratified it. Of these, however, Nebraska and Tennessee have rescinded their ratification. Whether Congress would accept such rescissions is, however, doubtful.

11. Have many amendments to the Constitution been repealed?

Only one—the 18th amendment (prohibition), which was repealed by the 21st amendment.

the Secretary of State of the United States; and 1 for the district judge. The count of all electoral ballots takes place in joint session of Congress every 4 years on January 6.

15. Did the electoral college ever vote unanimously for any President other than George Washington?

No. In the election of Monroe in 1820, one elector, William Plumer, voted against Monroe. Contrary to popular myth Plumer voted against James Monroe because he considered him a weak President, and not because he wanted Washington to be the only President to receive the electoral college's unanimous vote.

16. Why is election day on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November?

Despite a constitutional provision that "Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes; which day shall be the same throughout the United States," no national day of election was set until 1845, though Congress had provided in 1792 for the first Wednesday in December as the day for presidential electors to meet and cast their votes, and further had provided in that law for electors to be chosen within 34 days of the date on which they were to meet.

The impetus for setting a national election day was popular election of presidential electors and fraud attendant therewith because of different dates for election in the several States. Wagonloads of persons would be transported across State boundaries in order to cast ballots in other than their home State. The incidence of election fraud was widespread enough to arouse agitation for a national election day. Consequently, Congress enacted one in 1845. The Tuesday after the first Monday in November was chosen because it fell approximately 30 days prior to the date on which electors were to assemble to cast their ballots for President and Vice President. Tuesday was chosen to permit persons who had to travel some distance to the polls to do so on Monday rather than Sunday, a day of worship for Christians. The Tuesday after the first Monday also was chosen to guarantee against election day falling on the first day of the month, which would have been a bad day for business.

Over the years, the States have come to adopt this same day as the date for their general elections. This is not true for all State and local elections, however.

In recent years there has been discussion in Congress to change election day to Saturday or Sunday in order to encourage a higher turnout of voters. The arguments which favored the date chosen in 1845, it is now contended, no longer are persuasive.

17. Who is responsible for the regulation of elections in the U.S.?

The regulation of elections is the responsibility of the States subject to the requirements of the Federal Constitution. The Constitution provides, and the Supreme Court has ruled, that Congress has the power to regulate Federal elections in order to maintain the purity of the electoral process, and State elections in order that they be in conformance with constitutional requirements.

Its existence, authority, and limitations are provided by the Constitution, article I, which begins as follows:

"All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."

21. What is the term of a Congress?

In point of time, a Congress commences January 3 of each odd-numbered year, and continues for 2 years, regardless of the number of regular or special sessions held. There must be one regular session each year.

A session of Congress usually means that both Senate and House are in session, i.e., meeting for the transaction of business. The President may on extraordinary occasions convene both Houses, or either of them. Since the end of the Second World War, no President has seen fit to convene the Congress, or either House, in extraordinary session.

22. Is there a fixed limit to the length of a session?

Yes. The Constitution (amendment 20) directs Congress to hold an annual meeting commencing on January 3 of each year unless otherwise provided by Congress. The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 requires Congress to adjourn sine die not later than July 31 of each year unless there is a declared war, or unless Congress otherwise provides. In odd numbered years the Congress must take an August recess if it fails to adjourn by July 31.

23. Under what circumstances may the President call a special session of Congress?

Under the Constitution (art. II, sec. 3) the President may convene Congress, or either House, "on extraordinary occasions."

It is usual for the President in calling an extra session to indicate the exact matter which needs the attention of Congress. However, once convened, a Congress cannot be limited in the subject matter which it will consider.

24. When can a President adjourn Congress?

The Constitution (art. II, sec. 3) empowers the President to adjourn Congress "at such times as he may think proper" when the House and Senate disagree with respect to time of adjournment. No President has exercised this power. Many constitutional experts believe the provision applies only in the case of extraordinary sessions.

25. When Congress is in session, at what hour do the two Houses meet?

The time of meeting is fixed by each House. Under standing order, the House ordinarily meets at 12 o'clock noon and usually remains in session until 5 or 6 p.m.

The Senate also ordinarily meets at "12 o'clock meridian." No reason is known for this wording in the Senate, which calls it meridian rather than noon.

26. What is a Congressman?

A Congressman is a Member of either the Senate or the House of Representatives. However, a Member of the Senate is usually referred to as a Senator and a Member of the House as a Congressman. The official title of a Member of the House is "Representative in Congress."

the practice of dividing a State into districts was soon instituted. Congress later required that Representatives be elected from "districts composed of a contiguous and compact territory," but this recommendation is no longer in the Federal law.

The actual redistricting process has always been provided for by State law. In 1967, Congress by law prohibited at-large elections of Representatives in all States entitled to more than one Representative. Today, all States with more than one Representative must elect their Representatives from single-member districts.

34. What is the size of the House of Representatives and how is it fixed?

The Constitution entitles each State to at least one Representative. Beyond this minimum number, Representatives are apportioned among the States according to population. For the first Congress, i.e., before the taking of the first census, the Constitution itself fixed the number for each State—and therefore the size of the House. The only other constitutional limitation is that the number "shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand." Within this limit, Congress has the say as to the size of the House. With the great increase in population, and consequent number of Representatives, there have been frequent demands for a smaller House, but to date the trend has been the other way. Under the law now in force, the membership is fixed at 435 indefinitely. In addition to the Representatives from the 50 States there is a Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico and Delegates from the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

35. What is the procedure for apportionment of Representatives?

Population figures used for apportionment of Representatives are determined for States by each decennial census. For many years the actual apportionment was calculated according to the method of "major fractions" but under act of November 15, 1941, Congress adopted the method of "equal proportions." Briefly, this method takes the fixed size (currently 435) and after assigning 1 seat to each State, as required by the Constitution, allots the remaining 385 on the basis of a priority list obtained by dividing the population of each State by the geometric means of successive numbers of Representatives. This method makes the difference between the average number of Representatives per million people in any two States as small as possible.

36. What is the meaning of the phrase "one man, one vote"?

For many years the Supreme Court refused to become involved in redistricting of State legislative or congressional seats. In Colegrove v. Green (1946) the Court held that such questions were "political" in nature and, therefore, not a proper matter for Court determination.

The Court reversed itself, however, in 1962 when it ruled in Baker v. Carr that the lower house of the Tennessee State Legislature must be apportioned on the sole basis of population. Within 2 years of this decision suits had been filed in 41 of the 50 States contesting the legitimacy of State or congressional redistrictings. A number of rulings followed including Wesberry v. Sanders (1964), which held that congressional districts must be composed of substantially equal numbers of people, and Reynolds v. Sims (1964), which held that in both houses of a bicameral legislature districts must be "as nearly of equal population as is practicable."

41. What qualifications are prescribed for a Member of the Senate?

A Member of the United States Senate must be at least 30 years of age, must have been a citizen of the United States for 9 years, and must be a resident of the State from which he is sent to Congress.

42. What services are officially available to Members and to committees to assist them in the performance of their legislative duties?

Research assistance for Congress is available through the Office of the Legislative Counsel (one for each House), the Congressional Research Service, the Office of Technology Assessment, the General Accounting Office, and the newly established, but not yet operational, Congressional Budget Office.

The Legislative Counsel Offices help Members and committees draft bills, resolutions, and amendments and also offer advice on legal problems which arise in connection with a proposal. The Congressional Research Service, located in the Library of Congress, assists Members and committees in analyzing, appraising, and evaluating proposed legislation, and as well assists Members with their constituent inquiries. The Office of Technology Assessment, which began operations in 1973, is authorized to assist committees of the Congress and the House and Senate in assessing the physical, economic, social, or political effects of legislative proposals in order to guard against technological problems which may ensue from legislation passed by the Congress. The General Accounting Office conducts special audits, surveys, and investigations at the request of committees and Members.

In addition, each standing committee of the House and Senate is entitled to a staff of six professional and six clerical employees appointed by majority vote of the committee. Additional committee staff is hired with funds voted to each committee annually. Finally, every Senator and Representative is provided an allotment to hire office staff.

43. Can Members of Congress be impeached?

Probably not. The only instance in which impeachment proceedings have been instituted against a Member was the case of Senator Blount in 1798; the Senator resigned before the case came to trial in the Senate, so, although the decision was that the Senate had no jurisdiction, there has been some difference of opinion whether it is a clear-cut precedent. At any rate, no impeachment proceedings have been instituted against a Member since 1798.

Each House may, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a Member; and, of course, any Member is subject to prosecution in the courts for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, the same as private citizens.

44. Should one communicating with a Member of Congress send postage for reply?

Any correspondence with a Member in his strictly official capacity may be answered by him without payment of postage. The matter is covered by law, revised in 1973.

49. What is the role of the Congress in the impeachment process?

Impeachment is the process by which the President, Vice President, Federal judges, and all civil officials of the United States may be removed from office. Officials may be impeached for treason, bribery, and other high crimes and misdemeanors.

The House of Representatives has the sole authority to bring charges of impeachment (by a simple majority vote), and the Senate has the sole authority to try impeachment charges. An official may be removed from office only upon conviction, which requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate. The Constitution provides that the Chief Justice shall preside when the President is being tried for impeachment.

50. Are visitors allowed to listen in on the proceedings of Congress?

Yes; both Houses have visitors' galleries. Visitors are subject to control by the Presiding Officers of the two Houses, and the galleries may be cleared in case of disorder. In the Senate Chamber the galleries are cleared when the Senate goes into executive session. The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 makes provisions for modernizing and improving the House Visitors' Gallery. When completed, the Gallery will be enclosed with sound-proof and transparent cover to eliminate noise. In addition, various devices will be installed to provide comment and explanation to spectators about what is taking place on the House floor. This will enable visitors to understand more fully how Congress works.

51. What provision is made for the press to cover proceedings in Congress?

Special spaces are set aside for representatives accredited to the Press Gallery, the Radio and TV Gallery, and the Periodical Gallery.

52. How many newspaper, radio, television, and magazine correspondents have occasion to "cover" Congress?

During the 93d Congress approximately 2,200 persons were accredited to the Senate and House Press, Radio, and Periodical Galleries.

53. Are Members permitted to wear hats on the floor of Congress?

Until 1837, it was permissible for Congressmen to wear hats during sessions, after the fashion of members of Britain's Parliament. Since then Members of Congress have been prohibited from covering their heads until after leaving the legislative Chamber.

54. Do Senators have individual seats assigned them?

Yes. The individual seats are numbered and assigned on request of Senators in order of their seniority. Democrats occupy the west side of the Chamber—on the Vice President's right; Republicans sit across the main aisle to his left. There is no set rule for the seating of "independents."

55. Do the Members of the House have individual seats?

No. They did until the 63d Congress, but now any Member may sit where he chooses. Democrats occupy the east side of the Chamber, on the Speaker's right; Republicans sit across the main aisle on the Speaker's left.

61. What salary and expenses does the President of the Senate (Vice President) receive annually?

Salary, $62,500 (taxable); expense allowance, $10,000 (taxable). This applies either to the Vice President of the U.S., who is President of the Senate, or to the President pro tempore of the Senate in the event there is no Vice President.

The Vice President also receives allowances for clerk hire, stationery, and postage. Civil Service retirement benefits have been extended to the Vice President.

A Vice President-elect, who is not the incumbent President or Vice President, upon request is provided with the same necessary facilities, equipment, and allowances as a President-elect.

62. Does the President pro tempore vote in the Senate?

Yes. He participates in Senate debates and votes.

63. Can the Vice President vote in the Senate?

He can do so only in the event of a tie vote.

64. Has a Vice President of the United States ever been elected by the Senate?

One such instance is on record—that of Richard M. Johnson of Kentucky. In the 1836 election, Johnson received 147 electoral votes; Granger, 77; Tyler, 47; and Smith, 23. Johnson's total equaled that of the combined votes for the other three, but he lacked a majority. The Constitution provides that in such instances the Senate must choose between the two highest candidates whenever any fails to obtain a majority of all electoral votes. The Senate elected Johnson.

65. How many Vice Presidents have succeeded to the Presidency by reason of a vacancy in that office?

Nine: Tyler, Fillmore, Andrew Johnson, Arthur, Theodore Roosevelt, Coolidge, Truman, Lyndon B. Johnson, and Ford.

66. Of these successions, how many were caused by the assassination of Presidents?

Four: Lincoln, McKinley, Garfield, and Kennedy were killed by assassins. Andrew Johnson served as President during all but 1 month of Lincoln's second term; Theodore Roosevelt served 3½ years of McKinley's second term; Chester A. Arthur served about 3½ years of Garfield's term; and Lyndon B. Johnson served about 1¼ years of Kennedy's term.

67. Has a Vice President ever resigned?

Two Vice Presidents have resigned. John C. Calhoun resigned on December 28, 1832, three months before the expiration of his term, to become Senator from South Carolina. Spiro Agnew resigned October 10, 1973 subsequent to pleading nolo contendere (no contest) to a charge of Federal income tax evasion. Pursuant to Mr. Agnew's resignation, President Nixon nominated Gerald R. Ford, the Minority Leader of the House, to fill the vice presidential vacancy. 78. What are the customary proceedings when the House meets?

The Speaker calls the Members to order, and the Sergeant at Arms places the mace on the pedestal at the right of the Speaker's platform. Then the Chaplain offers prayers. Next the Speaker announces his approval of the Journal for the preceding day's activities without its having to be read, unless he orders that it be read or a motion to read it is passed. Members of the committee make reports of bills and then the House is ready to consider the bills left unfinished the day before or to take up a new bill on the Calendar, if there is no unfinished business.

79. Has the House ever changed its methods of organization and procedure?

Yes, it has altered them a number of times in the past.

In the early years, there were very few standing committees—only six in 1800. The work was done by the House, in general session, and by numerous special committees created to handle specific problems. The standing committees developed gradually during the first half of the nineteenth century. The Speaker eventually gained power until by the early years of this century he was regarded as second only to the President in the power of his office. His powers were drastically reduced in 1910 and 1911, when he was divested of his chairmanship of the powerful Committee on Rules and the power of appointing committees was taken from him.

The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 effected important changes in the organization and rules of both the House and the Senate. Among other things, it reduced the number of standing committees in the House from 39 to 19 (there are now 22). The peak in the number of standing committees in the House was reached in 1927, when there were 61. The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 brought about widespread changes in the committee systems and floor procedures of both Houses and in the technical assistance available to Congress.

80. What are some instances of the Senate changing its organization and procedure?

A gradual development and multiplication of standing committees had also occurred in the Senate. In 1921, the Senate adopted a resolution which reduced these in number from 74 to 34. By 1946, this number had increased to 46, at which time the Legislative Reorganization Act reduced it to 15. The number of standing committees is now 18.

An important amendment to its rules was adopted by the Senate in 1917 when it adopted a "rule of cloture," which may be used to check the time-honored custom of the "filibuster." The Senate cloture rule was amended on January 12, 1959, to restore the two-thirds voting requirement to "two-thirds of the Senators present and voting." Formerly, the two-thirds requirement was two-thirds of the membership (established as the Wherry amendment in 1949).

81. How are the rules of procedure in Congress determined?

The Constitution provides that each House may determine the rules of its proceedings.

(k) Return from Senate with or without amendment—if the Senate rejects the House bill it so notifies the House.

(l) Consideration of Senate amendments by the House—either agreeing, agreeing with amendment, or disagreeing with each amendment separately.

(m) Settlement of differences by conference.

(n) Enrollment on parchment paper.

(o) Examination by the appropriate committee—the chairmen of the House and Senate committees each certifying as to the correctness of the enrollment of bills of their respective bodies.

(p) Signing—by the Speaker first in all cases, then by the President of the Senate.

(q) Transmittal to the President of the United States.

(r) Approval or disapproval by the President—usually after referring it to the department affected for recommendation.

(s) Action on a bill vetoed—the House or Senate may consider the veto message at once, postpone consideration of the message to a certain day, or refer the same to a committee. If it fails to pass the House to which returned, by a two-thirds vote, no further action is taken.

(t) Filing with the Administrator of General Services on approval or passage over veto.

84. What is an enrolled bill?

When a bill has passed both House and Senate, the second House to take action notifies the first that the measure has passed: the originating House then causes the bill to be “enrolled” on parchment. When printed in this form there are no breaks or paragraphs in the flow of the language of the bill. The purpose of inscribing the bill solidly is to insure insufficient space between paragraphs for forgery.

85. What is an engrossed bill?

A bill is engrossed after it is read in its entirety in Congress for the second time. According to Rule XXI, House of Representatives, “Bills and joint resolutions on their passage shall be read the first time by title and the second time in full, when, if the previous question is ordered, the Speaker shall state the question to be: ‘Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?’ and, if decided in the affirmative, it shall be engrossed and read a third time by title, unless the reading in full is demanded by a Member.”

86. How many types of resolutions can Congress pass?

There are three kinds of resolutions acted upon by Congress: a simple resolution, which is passed by one House only; a concurrent resolution, which must pass both Houses; and a joint resolution, which requires the action of both Houses and signature of the President unless it is a proposed amendment to the Constitution.

87. What is the largest number of bills and joint resolutions ever introduced in a single Congress?

In the 61st Congress (1909–11), there was a total of 44,363 such measures introduced in both Houses. Around 25,000 bills and joint resolutions are introduced in the average Congress.

except by unanimous consent of the House. When bills are being considered in the Committee of the Whole for amendments, each Member is limited to 5 minutes except by unanimous consent.

95. What is a quorum of the House?

In the House of Representatives a quorum is a majority of the membership. When there are no vacancies in the membership a quorum is 218. There are usually a few vacancies—Members who have died or have resigned and their places yet unfilled. So an actual quorum is usually a little under that figure. Much business is transacted without a quorum. But no business of any importance, except to adjourn, can be transacted without a quorum present if any Member objects. All any Member has to do to get a full House is to arise, address the Speaker, and make a point of order that "no quorum is present." The Speaker says, "The Chair will count." If he cannot count a quorum present, the doors are closed, the bells are rung in the corridors and House Office Buildings (three rings indicate a call of the House), and the roll is called. This usually produces a quorum and business proceeds.

A majority of the membership also constitutes a quorum to do business in the Senate.

96. Why are congressional standing committees necessary?

Standing committees were established as early as 1803; before that, bills were discussed in Committee of the Whole, and then referred to a select committee for drafting. The development of standing committees of small membership (the largest in the House, Appropriations, has 55 members) was a practical necessity to ensure a preliminary check on the flood of bills introduced. Committee procedure, with its witnesses and cross-examination, offers a much more satisfactory method of reaching the real merits of a measure and presenting it in workable form than the necessarily limited consideration on the floor by a (possible) membership of 435.

97. How are the members of the standing committees selected?

Both parties have a committee on committees to recommend committee assignments. The proportion of Republicans to Democrats is fixed by the party in the majority for the time being. The House, then, by strict party vote, adopts the slate presented by the two parties. A similar method is used in the Senate.

98. What are the standing committees of the Senate?

The 18 standing committees are as follows: Aeronautical and Space Sciences; Agriculture and Forestry; Appropriations; Armed Services; Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs; Budget; Commerce; District of Columbia; Finance; Foreign Relations; Government Operations; Interior and Insular Affairs; Judiciary; Labor and Public Welfare; Post Office and Civil Service; Public Works; Rules and Administration; Veterans' Affairs.

99. What constitutes a quorum of a standing committee of the Senate?

Each Senate committee is authorized to establish a quorum for transaction of business—not less (except for taking testimony) than one-third the membership of the committee. A majority of the committee must be present to report a bill or recommendation.

105. Do the congressional committees hold hearings on all bills referred to them?

It is the view of many committees that any Member who insists on a hearing on any bill should have it. But there may be several bills almost identical or similar in substance. In such cases hearings frequently are on a group of related measures, or a hearing held on one bill serves for all. It is not always possible for a Member to have a hearing on his bill before a committee because of the tremendous pressure of business.

106. Does the congressional committee to which a bill is referred effectively control its disposition?

Ordinarily the action of a committee in failing to report a measure spells its defeat in either House. However, the House rules provide machinery by which a public bill may be taken out of committee, if held longer than 30 days. A petition, signed by a majority of the membership (218 Members), to discharge a committee from further consideration of the bill, will be placed on a special calendar and may be called up by any of the signers on the second or fourth Monday of any month. Only 20 minutes' debate is allowed on the motion; if it prevails, then the House further votes to consider the bill. It is then considered under the general rules.

This special procedure is resorted to very infrequently, and usually on measures of a controversial character. This is the House machinery for forcing consideration of measures which may be "buried" in committee.

107. Are committee records and files open to public inspection?

They are the property of Congress, and are accessible to any Member of either House.

108. What is a select committee?

A select committee is one established by the House or Senate usually for a limited period and generally for a strictly temporary purpose. When that function has been carried out the select committee automatically expires. A standing committee, on the other hand, is a regular, permanent unit in Congress.

109. How are joint committees established?

By three methods—by statute, joint or concurrent resolution.

110. How were the present joint committees established?

All were established by statute, the oldest being the statute creating the Joint Committee on the Library, dating from 1800.

111. What is a conference committee?

From the earliest days differences of opinion between the two Houses have been committed to conference committees to work out a settlement. The most usual case is that in which a bill passes one House with amendments unacceptable to the other. In such case, the House which disagrees to the amendment(s) generally asks for a conference, and the Speaker (and Vice President for the Senate) appoints the "managers," as the conferees are called. Usually, 5 or 7 managers are appointed from each House, representing both majority and minority opinion on the question at issue. Generally, they are

115. Are committee hearings open to the public?

Hearings by House committees and subcommittees are open to the public except when a committee, by majority vote, determines otherwise.

The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 permits, for the first time, radio and television broadcast of House committee and subcommittee hearings but only if a majority of the committee so votes and only if decorum is observed in their broadcast.

Hearings by Senate committees and subcommittees are also open to the public. Senate committee hearings may be closed to the public if the committee determines that testimony to be taken may relate to national security, reflect adversely on the character or reputation of witnesses, or divulge information which is of a confidential nature.

Hearings in the Senate have been broadcast for a number of years.

116. How are votes taken in the House?

In five different ways. Usually the Speaker puts the question in this form: "As many as are in favor (of the motion) say 'Aye,'" and then, "As many as are opposed say 'No.'" In many instances the vote taken is decisive enough to satisfy. But if the Speaker or any Member is in doubt, or if it sounds close, any Member may ask for a division. In this case the Speaker asks those in favor to stand up and be counted; then those opposed to the proposition to stand up and be counted. The Speaker does the counting and announces the result. But if there is still doubt, or if a demand is made by one-fifth of a quorum—that is, 20 in the Committee of the Whole, 44 in the House—tellers are appointed to make the count. The two tellers take their place at the head of the center aisle. All Members favoring the proposition walk between the tellers and are counted. Then those opposed walk between and are counted.

The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 provided for a new method of taking a teller vote, called "tellers with clerks," or a "recorded vote." If one-fifth of a quorum demands a teller-with-clerks vote, the procedure for a teller vote is followed except the clerks record the names of those voting on each side of a question and of those not voting, which are then entered into the House Journal.

If a rollcall is ordered, the Clerk reads the names of the whole membership, and as his or her name is called the Member answers "Aye" or "No." The names of those not voting the first time are read a second time, so that all Members in corridors, cloakrooms, committee rooms, or offices, who have been notified of a rollcall by signal bells, may come in and vote.

The 1970 Reorganization Act authorized voting by electronic device in the House. Installation of such a system was completed in 1973 so that commencing with the 93d Congress teller-with-clerks and rollcall votes can be taken electronically.

117. How may a record vote be obtained in the House or Senate?

The Constitution provides that " * * * the yeas and nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal."

With the passage of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 there is an additional means by which a record vote can be obtained in the House. This is the "teller-with-clerks" vote (see description in 116 above).

123. What is a "filibuster"?

The term is used to describe delaying tactics which are designed to prevent action on a measure in legislative bodies.

124. What filibustering tactics are possible in the House?

Inasmuch as no Member can address the House for more than 1 hour without unanimous consent, the only method of filibustering is to force rollcalls.

125. What method does the Senate have for meeting a filibuster?

In 1917, the Senate adopted what is called a "cloture rule" as a part of the Senate rules. As amended in 1959, it provides that the Senate may end debate by a two-thirds vote of the Senators present and voting. When 16 Senators file a petition asking to end debate, the Senate must vote on the petition at 1 p.m., the second calendar day thereafter. If two-thirds vote for cloture, then no Senator may thereafter talk longer than 1 hour. So long as more than one-third of the Senate is opposed to cloture, it is impossible to end a filibuster if enough of those Senators are willing to talk in relays.

126. Does a one-man filibuster mean that a single Senator is speaking continuously?

No. This is a point on which there is much confusion. A Senator who obtains the floor does not lose it when he yields temporarily to a colleague asking a question or calling for a quorum. In fact, a filibusterer can avail himself of a number of technical parliamentary moves which are time consuming and effective without his losing the floor.

127. What courses are open to the President when a bill is presented to him?

(a) The President may promptly sign it, whereupon it becomes a law. (b) He may hold it without taking any action, in which case it becomes law at the expiration of 10 days (Sundays excepted) without his signature if Congress is in session. (He may refuse to sign the bill because he disapproves of the measure and recognizes that a veto is either politically unwise or useless, or because he is undecided about the bill's constitutionality, as was President Cleveland on the income-tax law of 1894, and prefers not to commit himself.) (c) He may veto the bill. In this case, it may be voted on again by Congress—if it is in session—and if approved by a two-thirds vote in both Houses, it becomes law despite the President's veto.

128. When a President approves a bill, does he indicate in writing the specific time when he signed the measure?

He does so only when time is of extreme importance and the legislation is of extraordinary significance.

129. What is a "veto"?

The word "veto" is derived from the Latin and means "I forbid." The President is authorized by the Constitution to refuse his assent to any measure presented by Congress for his approval. In such case, he returns the measure to the House in which it originated, at the same time indicating his objections—the so-called veto message. The veto goes to the entire measure; the President is not authorized, as are the governors of some States, to veto separate items in a bill.

Coolidge, 50; and President Hoover, 37. President Cleveland vetoed more bills than any other President before President Franklin D. Roosevelt, but the bills were mostly private pension bills.

During President Cleveland's 2 terms, he vetoed 584 bills (238 of these were pocket vetoes). During President Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration of 12 years, 1 month and 8 days, he vetoed 631 bills (260 of them being pocket vetoes). President Truman vetoed 250 bills, 70 of which were pocket vetoes, from April 12, 1945, to January 20, 1953. President Eisenhower vetoed 181 bills, 108 of them pocket vetoes, during his 2 terms. President Kennedy vetoed 21 bills, including 9 pocket vetoes. President Johnson vetoed 30 bills, including 14 pocket vetoes. President Nixon vetoed 43 bills, including 19 pocket vetoes.

134. Are bills often passed over the President's veto?

Not very often. In the entire history of our country, as of the end of the Nixon administration, only 78 bills have been enacted by overriding a veto. Of these, 15 were passed over the veto of President Andrew Johnson; 12 over the veto of President Truman; 9 over the veto of Franklin D. Roosevelt; 7 over the veto of President Cleveland; 6 over the veto of Woodrow Wilson; 5 over the vetoes of Presidents Pierce and Nixon, respectively; 4 over the vetoes of Presidents Grant and Coolidge, respectively; 3 over the veto of President Hoover; 2 over the veto of President Eisenhower; and 1 bill was passed over the vetoes of Presidents Tyler, Hayes, Arthur, Benjamin Harrison, Theodore Roosevelt, and Taft, respectively.

135. What ceremony attends the signing of a bill by the President?

The President ordinarily signs bills without any particular attention being given his action.

Sometimes when he has a bill of special importance to sign, he arranges a ceremony for the occasion.

Sometimes he uses more than one pen to sign a bill, using each pen for various parts of his name. Then he gives these pens to those who have been most interested in the legislation.

In some instances organizations interested in the legislation have furnished the President with a gold pen and fancy penholder to be used in affixing his name. Afterward the organization frames the pen and keeps it as a souvenir.

136. What becomes of the bill after it is signed?

The signed bill is sent to the General Services Administration. There it is given a number as a public law and published forthwith as a "slip law"—i.e., in individual form. At the close of each session these are consolidated in a bound volume called United States Statutes at Large.

137. When does a bill, introduced at the beginning of a Congress, become "dead" and no longer open to consideration?

A bill introduced at any time during a Congress may be considered until the close of that Congress, irrespective of sessions. Thus, a bill introduced in January 1973, would, barring other considerations, be subject to action by the House until the final adjournment sine die of the 93d Congress.

OUR AMERICAN GOVERNMENT 99

142. What is a deficiency, or supplemental, bill?

A deficiency bill, now called a supplemental, is one carrying appropriations to supplement appropriations which have proved insufficient. Appropriations are normally made on the basis of estimates for a year but conditions may arise which exhaust the appropriations before July 1, when the new fiscal year begins. (Note: The Congressional Budget Act passed in 1974 requires fiscal years to begin October 1 as of 1976.)

143. What is "lobbying"?

In the broadest sense, this is any activity which has as its ultimate aim to influence the decisions of Congress, State and local legislatures, or executive agencies. The term arose from the use of lobbies, or corridors, in legislative halls as places to meet with and persuade legislators to vote a certain way. Lobbying in general is not an evil; many lobbies provide legislatures with reliable firsthand information of considerable value. But some lobbies have given the practice an undesirable connotation.

144. Is there any regulation of lobbying activities in Congress?

The Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act was enacted in 1946. This legislation seeks to reach lobbyists as hidden agents or open representatives in Washington; but in no case does it curtail the right to act as a lobbyist, it merely requires disclosure of sponsorship and source of funds.

145. How do lobbyists conform with the Regulation of Lobbying Act?

Such individuals must, if they solicit or accept contributions for lobbying purposes, keep accounts, present receipts and statements to the Clerk of the House, and register with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. The Clerk and the Secretary, acting jointly, are required to compile the information thus filed with them and publish it quarterly in the Congressional Record.

THE EXECUTIVE

146. How many Presidents have had previous service in Congress?

Twenty-three. Of the 23, seven had served in the House only (James Madison, James K. Polk, Millard Fillmore, Abraham Lincoln, Rutherford B. Hayes, William McKinley, and Gerald Ford), six in the Senate only (James Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Martin Van Buren, Benjamin Harrison, Warren G. Harding, and Harry S. Truman), and 10 in both Houses (Andrew Jackson, William Henry Harrison, John Tyler, Franklin Pierce, James Buchanan, Andrew Johnson, James A. Garfield, John F. Kennedy, Lyndon B. Johnson, and Richard Nixon). In addition, George Washington, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and James Monroe served in the Continental Congress.

147. What qualifications are prescribed for the President?

He must be a natural-born citizen, at least 35 years old, and for at least 14 years a resident of the United States. The question as to whether a child born abroad of American parents is "a natural-born citizen," in the sense of this clause, has been frequently debated. The answer depends upon whether the definition of "citizens of the United States" in section 1 of the 14th amendment is to be given an exclusive or inclusive interpretation.

acquires all the powers of the office; (2) that when the Vice Presidency is vacant, it shall be filled by nomination by the President when confirmed by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress; (3) that when the President informs Congress he is unable to discharge his duties and until he informs Congress otherwise, the Vice President shall act as President; (4) a procedure by which Congress would settle disputes between a Vice President and a President as to the latter's ability to discharge the powers and duties of his office. A law of July 18, 1947, sets the line of succession after the Vice President through the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President pro tempore of the Senate, and certain members of the Cabinet beginning with the Secretary of State.

Richard Nixon is the only President ever to resign; on August 9, 1974, under threat of impeachment and removal from office by the Congress (see also question 49 on impeachment and 67 on vice-presidential resignations).

153. What is the reasoning of the law relative to Presidential succession, which was approved by the President on July 18, 1947?

Proponents of this law argued that the Constitution expressly provides for the election of a President. In the event of his death and that of the Vice President, these proponents say, it would be within the spirit of the Constitution to have an elected official succeed to the Presidency rather than the Secretary of State, who is a Presidential appointee.

154. Who becomes President if a President-elect dies or is disqualified before the date fixed for the beginning of his term?

Under the 20th amendment, the Vice-President-elect becomes President in case of death of the President-elect before inauguration. If the President-elect fails to qualify, however, the Vice-President-elect acts as President, "until a President shall have qualified."

155. Who would succeed to the Presidency if the President-elect and the Vice-President-elect failed to qualify prior to Inauguration Day?

The Speaker of the House of Representatives. In the event he should be disqualified, the President pro tempore of the Senate and then in the following order: Secretary of State, Secretary of the Treasury; Secretary of Defense, Attorney General, Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of Commerce, Secretary of Labor, Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and Secretary of Transportation.

156. Why is the claim made that John Hanson was the first President of the United States?

This misconception stems from the adoption of the Articles of Confederation in 1781. They provided that the federal year was to begin on the first Monday in November. John Hanson was the first person to be elected President of the Congress after that date in 1781. However, he was not the first person to serve as President of the Congress subsequent to ratification of the Articles, March 1, 1781. Both Samuel Huntington and Thomas McKean served in that office after that date.

power consists solely of those powers enumerated for the President or whether it consists of additional powers that are implied in Article II. Most authorities lean toward the latter interpretation.

The actual powers expressly granted to the President are few in number. He is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and of the state militias when called into the service of the United States. He may require the written opinion of his executive officers and is empowered to grant reprieves and pardons except in the case of impeachment. He has power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided that two-thirds of the Senators present concur. He also nominates, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoints ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, Justices of the Supreme Court, and other Federal officers whose appointments are established by law. Congress has by law vested the appointment of inferior officers in the President. The President has the power to fill all vacancies that occur during the recess of the Senate. Those commissions expire unless the Senate consents to them when it reconvenes. The Constitution also directs the President periodically to inform Congress on the state of the Union and to recommend legislation that he considers necessary and expedient. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both Houses of Congress, or either of them, and in case the two Houses disagree as to the time of adjournment he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper. The President shall also receive ambassadors and other public ministers, take care that the laws are faithfully executed, and commission all officers of the United States. The President may veto acts of Congress. A two-thirds vote of those present and voting is required in both the House and the Senate to override his veto.

161. What is meant by "executive privilege"?

The President invokes the right of "executive privilege" when he decides to withhold information from Congress. Denial may be based on the need for secrecy, which was one of the reasons offered by President Washington when he refused to give the House of Representatives certain papers on the Jay Treaty. Other Presidents have invoked the privilege on the ground that disclosure of information may violate the confidence and trust that has to exist between the President and his assistants. In 1974 the Supreme Court in Nixon v. U.S. recognized the President's right to "executive privilege," but at the same time restricted its application by ruling that the President may not withhold evidence needed in criminal proceedings by invoking that privilege.

162. Has it always been customary for Presidents to appear before joint sessions of the House and Senate to deliver messages?

Presidents Washington and John Adams appeared before the two Houses in joint session to read their messages. Jefferson discontinued the practice in 1801, transmitting his message to the Capitol to be read by the clerks in both Houses. Jefferson's procedure was followed for a full century. On April 8, 1913, Wilson revived the practice of addressing the Congress in person. With the exception of Hoover the practice has been followed generally by subsequent Presidents.

163. What is the Federal Register System?

The Federal Register System, established in 1935 by the Federal Register Act, is the means by which administrative rules and regula-governors, nine of whom are appointed by the President, with the concurrence of the Senate, for staggered, 9-year terms. Not more than five may be of the same political party. These nine then select from outside their ranks a Postmaster General, who is chairman of the board. He, together with the board, chooses a Deputy Postmaster General.

The President also appoints an 11-member advisory council for two-year terms. Four of the members represent the major mailers, four the postal workers, and three the general public.

Postal rates are to be set by a Postal Rate Commission, composed of five presidentially appointed members. This Commission sets rates subject only to unanimous veto by the Board of Governors or to judicial review.

The Postal Service is authorized to issue $10 billion in bonds to finance its operations. In addition, there will be an annual subsidy from Congress through 1984.

Salary increases for postal employees are to be determined by collective bargaining.

THE JUDICIARY

170. Does the Constitution prescribe qualifications for Federal judges?

The Constitution does not state what qualifications are demanded of men for these offices, either as to age, citizenship, legal competence, or as to political viewpoint and background.

171. Who was the youngest Supreme Court Justice to serve on the Nation's highest tribunal?

The youngest was Joseph Story, who became a member of the Supreme Court at the age of 32 and served from 1811 to 1845.

172. Were any other Supreme Court Justices nominated and confirmed prior to their 40th birthday?

Besides Justice Story three became members of the Supreme Court before they were 40 years old: Justices James Iredell, Bushrod Washington, and William Johnson.

173. What is the Chief Justice's official title?

The first seven Chief Justices—Jay, Rutledge, Ellsworth, Marshall, Taney, Chase, and Waite—were referred to as "Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States." The next eight—Fuller, White, Taft, Hughes, Stone, Vinson, Warren, and Burger—were designated as "Chief Justice of the United States."

174. What is the difference between opinions and decisions of the Supreme Court?

An opinion is the statement of the reasoning by which the Court fortifies a decision in a particular case. The decision is reached by secret vote of the Justices, and the Chief Justice then assigns a Justice the task of writing the opinion.

175. What is a Supreme Court quorum?

Currently, six Justices constitute a quorum.

176. Can the salary of a Federal judge be reduced while he holds office?

The Constitution provides that these salaries shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

of special three-judge District Courts, certain decisions holding acts of Congress unconstitutional, and certain criminal decisions may be appealed directly to the Supreme Court.

185. What are the U.S. Courts of Appeals?

The Courts of Appeals are intermediate appellate courts, created by Act of March 3, 1891, to relieve the Supreme Court of considering all appeals in cases originally decided by the Federal trial courts. They are empowered to review all final decisions and certain interlocutory decisions of District Courts, except in those very few situations where the law provides for a direct review by the Supreme Court. They also are empowered to review and enforce orders of many Federal administrative bodies, such as the Securities and Exchange Commission and the National Labor Relations Board. The decisions of the Courts of Appeals are final except as they are subject to discretionary review or appeal in the Supreme Court.

40 OUR AMERICAN GOVERNMENT
177. Who determines the number of members constituting the Supreme Court?

Congress fixes the number of members and their salaries. By an Act of June 25, 1948, there are eight Associate Justices.

178. Does the Supreme Court review every case it receives?

The majority of cases are disposed of by the brief decision that the subject matter is either not proper or not of sufficient importance to warrant court review. Each year only 250 to 300 cases of importance are decided on their merits; about half of these decisions are announced in full published opinions.

179. When does the Court sit?

The Supreme Court meets on the first Monday in October for a session which generally extends to mid-June.

180. Are the Supreme Court sessions open to the public?

The sessions, which begin at 10 a.m. and last until 2:30 p.m., are open to the public Monday through Thursday. On Friday the Justices assemble for their weekly conferences, at which they alone are present. It is then that the cases which have been presented to them are discussed and voted upon.

181. Are Supreme Court decisions announced during public sessions of the tribunal?

The Justices disclose their decisions after they have met in executive session to discuss their views and to vote. During these discussions, every Justice expresses his findings and conclusions fully. The meeting culminates with a vote conducted by the Chief Justice, who calls upon his associates in reverse order according to the dates of their commissions. In many instances the Justices individually arrive at their decisions after arguments in the case have been heard, but such decisions remain secret until after the executive session and the vote.

182. Has it always been customary for one Justice to deliver the majority opinion?

It has not always been the practice of the Court to have one Justice deliver the majority and another the minority opinion. Originally the Justices delivered their own opinions, seriatim, whether in agreement with the majority or the minority. Chief Justice Marshall introduced the timesaving procedure of delivering one opinion for the Court. This proved desirable as the Court's business increased.

183. What is the salary of the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices?

The Chief Justice of the United States receives $62,500 annually and each Associate Justice $60,000 annually.

184. What are the District Courts of the U.S.?

The District Courts are the trial courts with general Federal jurisdiction. Each state and the District of Columbia has at least one District Court; many states have two or three districts, and Texas and New York have four districts each. There are 94 of these courts, 89 in the 50 states and one each in the District of Columbia, the Canal Zone, Guam, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. A district may be divided into divisions and may have several places where the court hears cases. Cases from the District Courts are reviewed by the U.S. Courts of Appeals, except that injunction orders tions issued by executive departments and agencies under authority of law are codified and made known to the public. It consists of the Federal Register, published daily Tuesday through Saturday except for the day following a legal holiday; the Code of Federal Regulations, an annually issued multi-volume cumulation of administrative regulations in force; and the annually published United States Government Organization Manual. The System is administered by the National Archives and Records Services of the General Services Administration.

164. What kinds of documents are published in the Federal Register?

There are four basic kinds of documents which must be published in the Federal Register before they are considered legally binding: (1) presidential proclamations and executive orders of general interest, and any other document the President submits or orders to be published; (2) every document issued under proper authority which prescribes a penalty or course of conduct; confers a right, privilege, authority, or immunity; or imposes an obligation, and which is relevant or applicable to the general public, members of a class of people, or persons of a locality; (3) documents or classes of documents required by act of Congress to be filed and published; and (4) other documents deemed by the Director of the Federal Register to be of sufficient interest. Although the Federal Register is unknown to many citizens, it constitutes a major means of regulating and governing in the United States.

165. What are the official duties of the Cabinet?

Cabinet members, as such, have no official duties, but are recognized as the President's regular advisers. They meet in the Cabinet room of the executive offices in the White House.

166. What are the Government positions held by members of the President's Cabinet?

Secretary of State, Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of Defense, Attorney General, Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of Commerce, Secretary of Labor, Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and Secretary of Transportation. The Vice President and certain other officials of the executive branch have been invited by the President to participate in Cabinet meetings.

167. What salary does a Cabinet member receive?

Sixty thousand dollars annually.

168. May the Secretary of State or any other Cabinet officer appear on the floor of either House to answer questions?

No. There has been considerable agitation since 1919 for extending the privilege of the floor to Cabinet members for the purpose of asking questions, but numerous measures to this effect have failed to be enacted.

Cabinet members, however, do appear before committees of the two Houses to give testimony, and they may visit either House while in session.

169. How did the Postal Reorganization and Salary Adjustment Act of 1970 change the Post Office Department?

The United States Postal Service is now an independent agency within the executive branch. It operates under an 11-member board of

It is incorrect to compare Hanson with Washington as a President. The Articles did not provide for a separate executive branch and Hanson was not the executive head of the Government despite his title as "President of the United States in Congress assembled." Stripped of its excess verbiage, this title meant merely that he was the presiding officer of the Congress. Moreover, in letters Hanson referred to himself as "President of Congress" not as "President of the United States."

157. What is the salary attached to the Presidency?

The President's salary is $200,000 a year, subject to income tax the same as other citizens' salaries.

158. What allowances does the President receive?

The President lives officially in the White House, although curiously enough the law merely grants him the use of the furniture and other effects belonging to the United States and kept in the Executive Mansion.

The President receives $50,000 annually (taxable) for expenses of official duties. In addition, he may spend up to $40,000 annually (nontaxable) for travel expenses and official entertainment.

A President-elect who is not the incumbent President, is, upon request, provided with necessary facilities and equipment to prepare him for assumption of his duties as President including suitable office space appropriately equipped with furnishings and office supplies. He is also supplied with funds to compensate members of his office staff at rates determined by him but not to exceed a Civil Service level of GS-18. Also, any employee of any agency of any branch of the Government may be detailed to such staff, responsible only to the President-elect but with continuance of compensation and other benefits from his former position without interruption. Payments may also be provided for the following: procurement of services of experts or organizations as consultants (not to exceed $100 per diem per individual), travel allowances for persons employed by him intermittently with or without compensation, communications services, printing and binding expenses, and postage.

159. Do former Presidents and their widows receive a pension?

Each former President is entitled to receive annually for the remainder of his life an amount equal to the salary of the head of an executive department (presently $60,000). He is entitled to $96,000 per year for office staff selected by him at rates of compensation set by him. A former President is also furnished with suitable office space and is granted free use of the mail.

The widow of a President is entitled to receive a pension of $20,000 per year if she waives the right to any annuity or pension under any other act of Congress and does not remarry before becoming 60 years of age.

Subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, the U.S. Secret Service is authorized to protect a former President and his wife during his lifetime, the widow of a President until her death or remarriage, and minor children of a former President until they reach the age of sixteen, unless such protection is declined.

160. What are the constitutional powers of the President?

Article II of the Constitution vests the "executive power" in the President. There is dispute among scholars as to whether the executive 148. What is the wording of the oath taken by the President? Who administers it?

The form of oath for the President is prescribed by the Constitution as follows:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Generally, the Chief Justice administers the oath, but this is merely custom. Any officer authorized to administer oaths could do it.

149. How is the President addressed?

Simply as "Mr. President." A letter sent to the Chief Executive is addressed "The President, The White House." One of the earliest congressional debates dealt with the title of the Chief Executive. A Senate committee recommended that the President be addressed, "His Highness, the President of the United States of America, and protector of their liberties." In the House, a debate on the subject was climaxed by James Madison's disclosure that the Constitution explicitly prescribed the Chief Magistrate's title as "President of the United States of America." When George Washington made his first inaugural address, the House made formal reply, addressing him simply as "The President of the United States." When the Senate's turn came to make a similar formal reply, the upper House reluctantly bowed to the precedent set by the lower House, but not without adopting a resolution declaring "that it would be proper to annex a respective title to the office" of President. "Thus it came about," writes Henry James Ford, "that the President of the United States is distinguished by having no title. A governor is addressed as 'Your Excellency,' a judge as 'Your Honor,' but the Chief Magistrate of the Nation is simply 'Mr. President.' "

150. How was the date for beginning the first President's term of office determined?

By the Constitutional Convention. When the Constitution was finally approved and ratified, the Convention ordered that Congress should fix a date for commencing proceedings under the new form of government. Accordingly, in 1788, Congress by resolution appointed March 4, 1789, as the day on which President Washington should assume his new duties. Although Washington was not inaugurated until April 30, 1789, his term began as of March 4.

151. What is now the date for commencement of the President's term?

Under the 20th amendment, effective with President Franklin D. Roosevelt's second term in 1937, the term of office of the President commences at noon on January 20, every 4 years.

152. What provision is made by the Constitution or by law for execution of the duties of President in event of the death, resignation or disability of the Chief Executive, or his removal from office?

Under article II, section 1, the Vice President exercises the powers and duties of the President in such case. The 25th amendment, ratified by the required three-fourths of the States on February 10, 1967, provides: (1) that a Vice President who succeeds a President

138. Are all of the laws of the United States published in one book? If so, how may it be obtained?

All of the permanent laws of the United States of general application currently in force are included in the Code of the Laws of the United States of America. After each regular session, a supplement is published, cumulating all laws enacted since the basic volume. The Code and supplements are published under supervision of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, printed at the Government Printing Office, and procurable from the Superintendent of Documents.

139. What is meant by a "rider" on a congressional bill?

A "rider" is an extraneous provision incorporated in an appropriation bill, with the idea of its "riding" through to enactment on the merits of the main measure. The practice is very old; in 1837 a "rider" on the fortifications appropriations bill would have provided for the disposal of the surplus funds in the Treasury. Under the rules any item of appropriation in a general appropriation bill that is not authorized by existing law nor in furtherance of projects already in progress is subject to a point of order (this is often waived by a special rule in the House); and the same with any provision "changing existing law," unless it is germane to the subject and designed to retrench expenditures (the so-called Holman rule). Occasionally a "rider" becomes law, without the point of order being raised.

An example of a legislative rider was contained in an appropriation rescission bill which was vetoed by President Truman. The rider, which was not germane to the bill and wholly unrelated to its subject matter, provided that the United States Employment Service would be returned to the States in 100 days.

President Truman, believing that this subject should receive separate consideration and was entitled to be passed upon by him separate and distinct from any other legislation, vetoed the entire bill to get rid of the rider.

140. Why must tax bills originate in the House?

The constitutional provision (all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; art. I, sec. 7) is an adaptation of the English practice. The principle involved, which had been established in England after long struggle, is that the national purse strings should be controlled by a body directly responsible to the people. So when the Constitution was formulated, as Members of the Senate were to be chosen by the several State legislatures, the initiation of revenue legislation was restricted to the House, where the Members were subject to direct election every 2 years. However, the Senate has had from the start full power to amend revenue legislation.

141. Must all appropriation bills originate in the House?

There has been considerable argument and difference of opinion as to whether "bills for raising revenue" include appropriation bills. But it is uniform practice that general appropriation, as distinguished from special bills appropriating for single, specific purposes, originate in the House.

130. What is a "pocket veto"?

By the Constitution the President is allowed 10 days (exclusive of Sundays) from the date of receiving a bill within which to give it his approval; if, within 10 days, Congress adjourns and so prevents the return of a bill to which the President objects, that bill does not become law. In many cases, where bills have been sent to him toward the close of a session, the President has taken advantage of this provision, and has held until after adjournment measures of which he disapproved but which for some reason he did not wish to return with his objections to Congress for their further action. This action is the so-called pocket veto.

131. What important court cases have related to the pocket veto?

In The Pocket Veto Case (279 U.S. 655, 1929) the Supreme Court decided that when Congress had adjourned at the close of a first regular session—not to reassemble, perhaps, for several months—it had effectively prevented the return of a bill which the President had vetoed, and that the bill in such case did not become law.

In Wright v. U.S. (302 U.S. 583, 1938) the Court decided that in the case of a temporary recess by one House only, while Congress was still in session, the President could constitutionally return a vetoed bill to the proper officer of the House, which could then take what action it saw fit.

In Kennedy v. Sampson, a 1974 D.C. United States Court of Appeals' decision, the court held that President Nixon had erred in declaring a bill pocket vetoed December 24 because a congressional recess from December 22 to December 28 prevented his returning the bill to the Congress. The court declared that Congress had made arrangements for deliverance of presidential messages to it and so the President had sources to whom he could deliver a regular veto message. It further found that when Congress is absent during intrasession recesses but will be returning, it deserves the opportunity to override a veto. Accordingly, Presidents may no longer use an intrasession recess to pocket veto bills and thus avoid a possible reversal in Congress. The Justice Department could yet appeal this decision to the Supreme Court.

132. Is there any restriction on what a President may veto? May he veto a declaration of war or a constitutional amendment?

A President may veto any measure that is properly before him, regardless of its character. He may therefore veto private bills (in fact this constitutes the largest class of bills vetoed) as well as public bills and a declaration of war the same as any other. He cannot, however, veto separate items of bills—it must be the whole or nothing. Since proposals to amend the Constitution do not require the approval of the President, they are not submitted to him. But resolutions proposing constitutional amendments must be passed by a two-thirds vote in both Houses of Congress.

133. Are many bills vetoed?

Not very many. During the 8 years Woodrow Wilson was President, he vetoed 44 bills. President Harding vetoed 6; President

If a vote is being taken in the House when a quorum is not present, and a point of order is made that a quorum is not present and the vote is objected to on that ground, a rollcall is automatic.

118. What is "pairing"?

In the House a pair is a written agreement between Members on opposite sides not to vote on a specified question or during a stipulated time. It is in effect equivalent to a vote on the part of each against the proposition favored by his colleague. It is available to Members desiring to preserve their vote or the vote of a colleague during absence from the House. The practice appeared in the House of Representatives as early as 1824. It was not officially recognized in the House rules until 1880; at present, pairs are announced by the Clerk and published in the Record.

Pairing is also practiced and permitted in the Senate although not recognized by the rules.

119. What is the difference between a "general pair" and a "live pair"?

The "general pair" is an arrangement to take care of a definite period of time, and covering all measures coming to a vote within the period fixed. On a particular question, a Member desiring to be absent may seek a "pair" with a Member on the opposite side on this question. The man the absent Member is "paired" with will not vote. The two votes would cancel each other anyhow, so it is a fair and convenient arrangement. This is called a "live pair."

120. What is the "previous question"?

A motion for the previous question, if agreed to by a majority of Members voting, has the effect of cutting off all debate and bringing the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered.

121. What are the functions of the House Rules Committee?

This committee expedites House consideration of bills reported by other committees. Most of its work is to decide whether or not to grant special consideration for bills which otherwise might be long delayed on the various calendars of the House. When the Rules Committee reports a special rule to the House, it is usually adopted. When it is adopted, the bill to which it refers is considered under the provisions of that rule.

122. What business can be transacted by unanimous consent?

Practically anything can be done in either House by unanimous consent—except where the Constitution or the rules specifically prohibit the Presiding Officer from entertaining such a request. For example, since the Constitution requires that a rollcall vote be taken to pass a bill over a presidential veto, the Presiding Officer of the House or the Senate cannot entertain a unanimous-consent request to waive this requirement; in the House of Representatives, the Presiding Officer cannot admit to the Chamber persons who are not permitted to be present under the rules; nor may visitors in the galleries be introduced to the House. A majority of bills are passed by unanimous consent.

selected from the committee which has charge of the bill. The conference committee attempts to resolve the points in disagreement. It issues a report to each House. If the report is accepted by both Houses, the bill is then signed and sent to the President; if rejected by either House, the matter in disagreement comes up for disposition anew as if there had been no conference.

The conference committee, however, may not reach complete accord, in which case it so reports. After the House which acts first concurs in the recommendations agreed to by the conferees, the items still in disagreement are taken up seriatim for disposal by agreement, disagreement, etc. The report is then acted on similarly in the other House. Unless all differences are finally adjusted, the bill fails.

112. What is the first reading of a bill?

Formerly a bill was first read by title at the time of introduction. Since 1890, the first reading is accomplished by the mere printing of the title in the Congressional Record and the Journal.

113. What is meant by the different calendars of the House?

A legislative calendar is a docket or list of measures reported from committee and ready for consideration by the House. There are three calendars to which business reported from committees is initially referred:

1. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, frequently called the Union Calendar, to which are referred all public bills raising revenue or involving a charge against the Government.

2. A House Calendar, for all public bills not raising revenue or appropriating money or property.

3. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House for all private bills—the so-called Private Calendar.

There is also a special calendar, known as the Consent Calendar, to which measures may be referred on request of a Member from either the Union or the House Calendar. Bills on this calendar are called in the order in which they appear. Consideration is blocked by a single objection; and when it is again called on the calendar, if three Members object, it is stricken from the Consent Calendar.

114. What is the Committee of the Whole?

Motions or propositions involving taxes or appropriations, authorizing payments out of appropriations or releasing liability to the United States or referring claims to the Court of Claims, are considered first in the House sitting as a Committee of the Whole. (There are technically two such committees, in effect standing committees—one, the Committee of the Whole House, to consider business on the Private Calendar, and the other, the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, to consider business on the Union Calendar.) Upon resolving into Committee of the Whole, the Speaker gives way to a Chairman appointed by him and the mace is moved to a lower pedestal. Speeches are limited to 5 minutes for and against amendments. The "previous question" cannot be put in the Committee; and the Committee does not adjourn, but rises and reports to the House, whether their business is unfinished or finished. A quorum is 100 Members.

The Senate in 1930 discontinued the device of a Committee of the Whole except in considering treaties.

100. What are the standing committees of the House?

There are 22 standing committees as follows: Agriculture; Appropriations; Armed Services; Banking and Currency; Budget; District of Columbia; Education and Labor; Foreign Affairs; Government Operations; House Administration; Interior and Insular Affairs; Internal Security; Interstate and Foreign Commerce; Judiciary; Merchant Marine and Fisheries; Post Office and Civil Service; Public Works; Rules; Science and Astronautics; Standards of Official Conduct; Veterans' Affairs; Ways and Means.

101. What is meant by the "seniority rule"?

It is a custom whereby a Member, who has served longest on the majority side of a committee, becomes chairman and otherwise acquires additional influence. Members are ranked from the chairmanship according to length of service. If a Member loses his seat in Congress, and then returns, he starts at the bottom of the list again, except that he outranks those Members who are beginning their first terms. Changes approved for the 92d and 93d Congresses make the "seniority rule" less rigid than in previous years.

102. How far back does the "seniority system" date in Congress?

The Senate adopted it in 1846; the House of Representatives in 1910.

103. What arrangements are made for a meeting of a standing committee of the House?

Each committee has a large committee room, its size and accommodations depending upon the importance of the committee. Each of the major committees of the House has a large meeting room equal in size to the average United States district courtroom. The members of the committee have individual seats in a semicircle around the committee table. A witness appearing before this committee in support of or in opposition to a bill is usually given time to make his own statement and then the committee members are privileged to question him. The usual time of meeting is 10 o'clock in the morning and sometimes in the afternoon and night when the House is not in session.

104. Under what circumstances do House committees originate bills?

Members sometimes present petitions. Reference of such petition to the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter gives it authority to draw a bill. The same is true when communications addressed to the House from the President, executive departments, or other sources are referred to appropriate committees. General supply bills, revenue measures, and other similar proposals originate in the committees.

The procedure of having a committee draw bills was in fact the regular order under the early rules. A Member desiring to introduce a bill had first to obtain leave of the House, whereupon a committee (including the mover and seconder) was appointed to prepare the bill in question. The present practice of free introduction developed after 1850.

88. How does the total of bills and joint resolutions introduced in Congress compare with the number enacted?

From March 4, 1789, to the adjournment of the 92d Congress 1,036,829 bills and joint resolutions have been introduced in both Houses. Of this total, only 83,803 were enacted.

89. What is meant by a public bill (or law)?

A bill dealing with classes of citizens is a public bill as distinguished from a private bill for the benefit of individuals. It is not always obvious whether a bill is public or private; for example, a bill for the benefit of individuals, but which included provisions of general legislation, was classed as a public bill. The question comes up chiefly in determining whether the bill should be referred to the Union, House, or the Private Calendar—and whether the resulting law should be printed in part 1 (public laws) or part 2 (private laws) of the Statutes at Large.

90. How does a Senator introduce a bill?

When a Senator rises to introduce a bill, he says, "Mr. President," and waits for the Vice President to recognize him. The Vice President recognizes the Senator by looking at him and saying: "The Senator from * * *," naming the State from which the Senator comes.

Then the Senator states that he desires to introduce a bill.

A Senator often introduces several bills at the same time by saying that he desires to introduce sundry bills and have them referred to the proper committees. A Senator may introduce a bill at any time by obtaining unanimous consent for that purpose.

91. How does a Member of the Senate obtain recognition to speak?

When a Senator desires to speak, he shall rise and address the Presiding Officer and shall not proceed until he is recognized, and the Presiding Officer shall recognize the Senator who shall first address him.

92. Is there any limitation on debate in the Senate?

The only limitation on debate in the Senate, except such as may be imposed by unanimous consent, is that provided by the cloture rule. (See question and answer No. 125).

93. How does a Member of the House of Representatives obtain recognition from the Speaker to address the House, and how long may he speak?

"When any Member means to speak, he is to stand up in his place, uncovered, and to address himself, not to the House or any particular Member, but to the Speaker * * *."

The length of time depends upon the matter before the House or the circumstances bringing it up, but in no event is a Member of the House allowed to proceed longer than 1 hour without unanimous consent.

94. How is debate limited in the House?

General debate in the House is usually limited by special rule, the time being equally divided between the majority and the minority, and allotted to the individual Members by the Members designated in the rule. In no case may a Member speak longer than 1 hour

The parliamentary practice of the House of Representatives emanates from four sources: First, the Constitution of the United States; second, Jefferson's Manual; third, the rules adopted by the House itself from the beginning of its existence; and fourth, the decisions of the Speakers of the House and decisions of the Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole, many of which are collected in Hinds' and Cannon's Precedents.

The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 changed the rules of the two Houses in certain important respects, subject to the constitutional right of either House to change them again at any time. The new rules were enacted "as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives respectively."

82. What is the difference between a bill and an act?

"Bill" is the technical designation of a measure introduced in either House, and until it has been passed by that House. At that point it is reprinted as an act, i.e., an act of one branch of the Congress. The term "act" is, however, popularly used in referring to a measure which has been finally passed by both Houses and becomes law, whether by approval of the President or by passage over his veto.

83. What are the stages of a bill in the House?

Following in brief are the usual steps in procedure—further details on some of the stages are presented in subsequent paragraphs:

(a) Introduction by a Member, by placing the measure in the "hopper," a box on the clerk's desk; it is numbered and sent to the Government Printing Office and made available next morning at the document room.

(b) Reference to a standing or select committee—public bills and bills coming from the Senate, by the Parliamentarian under direction of the Speaker, private bills on endorsement of the Member.

(c) Report from committee—usually after hearing, either before the full committee or a subcommittee.

(d) Placing on the calendar—according to its classification as a revenue bill, private bill, etc. Occasionally a privileged bill is considered when reported.

(e) Consideration in Committee of the Whole, if on the Union Calendar—including general debate and reading for amendments, with speeches limited to 5 minutes for and against amendments.

(f) Second reading and consideration in the House—in the case of bills considered in Committee of the Whole, the second reading is had in Committee. In either case, the bill is open to amendment on the second reading.

(g) Engrossment and third reading—the question is put by the Speaker as of course and decided at one vote. Any Member may demand reading in full. A negative vote at this stage defeats the bill as completely as a vote on passage.

(h) Passage—the question of the passage being put by the Speaker as a matter of course without motion from the floor.

(i) Transmission to the Senate, by message.

(j) Consideration by the Senate—usually after reference to and report from committee, reading, debate, and opportunity for amendment.

73. What is a party leader?

There is a majority leader and a minority leader. In talks on the floor, Members do not usually refer to Democrats and Republicans. Generally, they refer to the "majority" and the "minority."

The leader is all the title implies. He leads in party debate. He brings forward party programs and policies. His advocacy of, or opposition to, proposed legislation indicates the party preference. The majority leader has much control over what legislative programs come up and when.

74. Is the majority leader, in either branch of Congress, elected by the House or Senate?

The majority leaders in both House and Senate are not officers of that body, but of the party numerically in the majority at the time. So while each House, under the Constitution, chooses its officers, majority leaders are not selected by the House or Senate as such but by a party caucus or conference.

75. What are the duties of the "whips" of the House?

The whips (of the majority and minority parties) keep track of all important political legislation and endeavor to have all members of their parties present when important measures are to be voted upon. When the vote is likely to be close they check up, find out who is out of the city, and advise absentees by wire of the important measures coming up.

The office of whip is unofficial and carries no special salary. Each whip, however, is allowed certain additional help, sufficient office space, and to incur additional expenses in the performance of his duties.

76. What are the powers and duties of the Sergeants at Arms of the Senate and House of Representatives?

The office of Sergeant at Arms is derived from a similar office in both Houses of the British Parliament. The Sergeant at Arms is, above all, the chief disciplinary officer and is empowered to enforce order upon the floor. In the House he has a special symbol of office, the mace; also, he is the disbursing officer for Members' salary and mileage. Both officers share certain joint responsibilities, such as policing the Capitol and grounds; they act as executive and purchasing officers for their respective bodies, and in general see to it that the respective rules and wishes of the two Houses are faithfully carried out. Finally, in each House, its Sergeant at Arms, by the direction of the Presiding Officer, may compel the attendance of absent Members.

77. What are the duties of the Parliamentarian?

Both the House and the Senate appoint a Parliamentarian to assist in rendering correct parliamentary decisions and to keep the practices and precedents uniform. He must be so well versed with the rules and practices of his House that he can give the Chair a decision on a moment's notice.

Amendment under which Mr. Ford had been nominated, approved the nomination and Mr. Ford was sworn in December 6, 1973. Less than a year later Mr. Ford became President subsequent to Richard Nixon's resignation. On August 20, 1974 he nominated Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President. Thus, in less than one year two occasions arose for using the provisions of the Twenty-fifth Amendment to fill a vacancy in the vice presidency.

(See question 152 on the 25th amendment.)

68. Who are the officers of the House, and how are they chosen?

The Constitution (art. I, sec. 2) says that the House "shall choose their Speaker and other officers"—i.e., the membership vote as on any other question, except that in this case it is strictly a party vote. Republicans and Democrats both meet before the House organizes for a new Congress, and choose a slate of officers. These are presented at the initial session of the House, and the majority party slate is selected. The vote is viva voce, except for the Speaker.

The officers include Speaker, Chaplain, Clerk, Sergeant at Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster. Each of these elective officers appoints any employees provided by law for his department. The table on p. 17 shows the party make-up of both the Senate and House of Representatives from the 34th through the 93d Congress.

69. Who presides in the House?

The Speaker of the House. He is nominated at the majority party caucus and subsequently elected by the Members of the House of Representatives.

The Speaker may appoint a Speaker pro tempore, but not for more than 3 days at a time without the consent of the House.

70. What are the duties of the Speaker of the House?

He presides over the House, appoints the chairmen to preside over the Committees of the Whole, appoints all special or select committees, appoints conference committees, has the power of recognition of Members, and makes many important rulings and decisions in the House. The Speaker may vote, but usually does not, except in case of a tie. The Speaker and the majority leader determine administration policies in the House, often confer with the President, and are regarded as spokesmen for the administration if they and the President belong to the same political party.

71. Could a person other than an elected Representative in Congress serve as Speaker of the House?

Yes. There is no constitutional objection to such an arrangement. The House is empowered to choose its Speaker and other officers, without restriction. But in fact, the Speaker has always been a Member of the House.

72. Who has been Speaker of the House of Representatives for the longest period of time?

The late Honorable Sam Rayburn, of Bonham, Texas, who was a Member of the House 48 years and 8 months and served as Speaker 17 years and 2 months. The record for longest continuous service as Speaker is held by John McCormack, of Dorchester, Massachusetts, who served consecutively for 8 years, 11 months, and 23 days, thus surpassing Champ Clark (7 years, 10 months, 29 days) and Joseph G. Cannon (7 years, 3 months, and 24 days).

U.S. AMERICAN GOVERNMENT

56. Does the term "senior Senator" apply to age or service?

The word "senior" or "junior" as applied to Senators refers to their service, and not to their ages. A "senior Senator" may be much younger in years than the "junior Senator." A Senator must have served continuously to be entitled to the senior rank, which also carries a little more prestige with the Senate body and the administration.

57. What is the mace, and what is its significance?

The mace is the only visible symbol of Government authority in the United States. It is an institution, borrowed from the British Parliament, where it had become a traditional symbol of parliamentary authority. Its origin goes back to the "fasces" of republican Rome—the bundle of rods and an ax which was carried by the lictors who attended each Roman magistrate as he held court and administered justice. From this very practical instrument (the rods for administering whippings and the ax for beheading) the "fasces" developed and evolved into a symbol, known as the mace.

This symbol was adopted by the House of Representatives by resolution of April 14, 1789—there is no mace in the Senate. The present mace dates from 1841; it is a reproduction of the original which was burned in the Capitol in 1814. It consists of a bundle of 13 ebony rods bound with silver and terminating in a silver globe, surmounted by a silver eagle with wings outspread. The sergeant-at-arms is its custodian and is charged with its use when necessary to preserve order.

58. Do the political parties offer legislative guidance to their individual Members in Congress?

The Democratic and Republican parties try to guide their Members by means of caucuses and conferences.

Democrats hold a party caucus, and may bind the Members to vote a certain way on a bill if two-thirds vote in favor of being bound. However, a Member may excuse himself if he has a good and sufficient reason, such as having committed himself to a contrary position when seeking election.

The Republicans hold a party conference instead of a caucus, and their Members cannot be bound.

59. Who are the officers of the Senate and how are they chosen?

They are: President pro tempore, Secretary, Sergeant at Arms, Chaplain, Secretary for the Majority, and Secretary for the Minority. All are elected by resolution of the Senate.

60. Who presides in the Senate?

The Vice President of the United States. He is referred to in the Senate as "Mr. President," because his title in that body is "President of the Senate."

The Senate also elects from among its members a President pro tempore, who holds office at the pleasure of the Senate and presides during absences of the Vice President of the United States.

Members, Members-elect, Resident Commissioners, Resident Commissioners-elect, Delegates, and Delegates-elect may send free through the mails, under their franks, within certain limitations, any mail matter to any Government official or to any person, correspondence upon official or departmental business. Retiring Members are permitted the franking privilege until April 1 after expiration of term to close up all official business on hand.

45. How should one address a Member of Congress if he desires to communicate with him?

Example as follows: Hon. John Jones, M.C., House (or Senate) Office Building, Washington, D.C.

If Congress is not in session, the communication may be addressed to his hometown although many Members keep their Washington offices open.

46. Is a woman Member of Congress referred to as a "Congresswoman"?

In the House she is "the Congresswoman from ____." The constitutional title is "Representative in Congress." In correspondence she should be addressed as "Dear Representative ____." In the Senate, "the Senator from ____."

47. How many women have served in the Congress; who was the first; how many have chaired committees?

Excluding Delegates, eighty-seven women had been elected or appointed through August, 1974: seventy-six to the House of Representatives only and ten to the Senate only. Only one, Margaret Chase Smith, has served in both the House and the Senate. The first woman Member of Congress, Jeanette Rankin, was elected to the House in 1916, before the Nineteenth Amendment guaranteed suffrage to all women.

Six women have chaired congressional committees. Mae Ella Nolan chaired the House Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department in the 68th Congress; Mary Theresa Norton chaired the House District of Columbia Committee in the 74th Congress and until June 22, 1937 in the 75th Congress, the House Labor Committee from June 22, 1937 through the 79th Congress, and the House Administration Committee in the 81st Congress; Hattie W. Caraway chaired the Senate Committee on Enrolled Bills in the 73d-78th Congresses; Edith Nourse Rogers chaired the House Veterans' Affairs Committee in the 80th and 83d Congresses; Martha W. Griffiths chaired the Select Committee on the House Beauty Shop from the 90th-93d Congresses; and Leonor K. (Mrs. John B.) Sullivan chaired the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee in the 93d Congress.

48. How many blacks have served in the Congress?

Through August of 1974, 43 blacks had served in the Congress, 40 in the House of Representatives and three in the Senate. Joseph H. Rainey of South Carolina was the first black to serve in the House, from December 12, 1870, to March 3, 1879. Hiram R. Revels of Mississippi, appointed by the State legislature to fill a vacancy, was the first black to serve in the Senate, from February 23, 1870 to March 3, 1871.

10 OUR AMERICAN GOVERNMENT

The phrase used to describe in a nutshell the Court's requirement for a constitutional redistricting is "one man, one vote," which means that in the drawing of political boundaries for purposes of representation it is essential that a good faith effort be made to attain, as nearly as practicable, equality of population among the districts.

37. How many Members does each State have in the Senate and House of Representatives?

Each State, by the Constitution, is always entitled to two Senators and at least one Representative. Additional House seats are apportioned on the basis of population. Under the apportionment based on the 1970 census—effective commencing with the 93d Congress which convened in January of 1973—the 50 States have the following number of Representatives (apportionments for the 92d Congress, based on the 1960 census, are also shown—in parentheses—for States which gained or lost House seats because of population shifts): Alabama, 7 (8); Alaska, 1; Arizona, 4 (3); Arkansas, 4; California, 43 (38); Colorado, 5 (4); Connecticut, 6; Delaware, 1; Florida, 15 (12); Georgia, 10; Hawaii, 2; Idaho, 2; Illinois, 24; Indiana, 11; Iowa, 6 (7); Kansas, 5; Kentucky, 7; Louisiana, 8; Maine, 2; Maryland, 8; Massachusetts, 12; Michigan, 19; Minnesota, 8; Mississippi, 5; Missouri, 10; Montana, 2; Nebraska, 3; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 2; New Jersey, 15; New Mexico, 2; New York, 39 (41); North Carolina, 11; North Dakota, 1 (2); Ohio, 23 (24); Oklahoma, 6; Oregon, 4; Pennsylvania, 25 (27); Rhode Island, 2; South Carolina, 6; South Dakota, 2; Tennessee, 8 (9); Texas, 24 (23); Utah, 2; Vermont, 1; Virginia, 10; Washington, 7; West Virginia, 4 (5); Wisconsin, 9 (10); and Wyoming, 1.

38. In the event of the death or resignation of a United States Senator, how is the vacancy filled?

A vacancy in the office of United States Senator from any State is usually filled by a temporary appointment by the governor, which continues until the general election, at which time a Senator is elected for the remainder of the term, if it had longer to run. The 17th amendment directs the governor to call an election, but authorizes the legislatures to make provision for an immediate appointment pending election, and this alternative is ordinarily followed.

39. In the event of the death or resignation of a Representative, how is the vacancy filled?

The United States Constitution, article I, section 2, which deals with the House of Representatives, provides: "When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies." Governors are not permitted to appoint a Member of the House of Representatives where a vacancy has occurred in a particular congressional district.

40. What qualifications are prescribed for a Representative in Congress?

A Member of the House of Representatives must be at least 25 years of age, must have been a United States citizen for at least 7 years, and must reside in the State from which he is sent to Congress.

OUR AMERICAN GOVERNMENT

27. What are the annual salaries of Representatives and Senators?

Each Member of Congress receives a salary of $42,500. However, the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate and the House of Representatives receive $49,500. The Speaker of the House receives $62,500, as does the President pro tempore of the Senate when there is no Vice President.

28. What is a Delegate or Resident Commissioner, as distinguished from a Congressman?

The office of Delegate was established by ordinance of the Continental Congress and confirmed by a law of Congress. From the beginning of the Republic, accordingly, the House has admitted Delegates from territories or districts organized by law. Delegates, or Resident Commissioners, may participate in House debate but they are not permitted to vote on the floor. Presently there are a Resident Commissioner and three Delegates in the House (the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, since July 1946; Delegate from the District of Columbia, since March 1971; and Delegates from the Virgin Islands and Guam since January 1973). All serve on committees of the House and possess powers and privileges equivalent to other members of committees.

29. What are the salary and allowances of a Delegate or Resident Commissioner in the House of Representatives?

A Delegate or Resident Commissioner receives the same salary ($42,500) as a Representative. He also, with certain exceptions, receives the same allowances for postage, travel, staff, etc.

30. Have Senators and Representatives ever received different rates of pay?

Yes. From March 4, 1875, to March 10, 1876, Senators were paid $7 per day during attendance at extra sessions. Representatives were paid $6 per day during attendance.

31. How are Senators and Representatives elected?

By popular vote on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in even-numbered years. The qualifications of voters at this general election are, for the most part, the same as for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures. (See Questions 16 and 17 for further details.)

32. Have United States Senators always been elected by the people?

Senators were originally elected by the State legislatures (Constitution, art. I, sec. 3). Direct election by the people was provided for by the 17th amendment, effective as to Senators elected after May 31, 1913.

33. Who defines the congressional districts—the U.S. or the States?

Congress fixes the size of the House of Representatives, and the procedure for apportioning the number among the States, but the States themselves carry on from there. In the very early years of the Republic, most States elected their Representatives at-large. However,

For most of our history congressional regulation was minimal. In recent years, however, Congress has enacted considerable legislation to regulate elections. In addition, five amendments to the Constitution directly bear on the regulation of elections (the 14th, 15th, 19th, 24th, and 26th). Since 1957, Congress, exercising its constitutional authority, has enacted laws designed to prevent racial discrimination in the electoral process (the Civil Rights Acts of 1957, 1960, and 1964). In 1965, Congress enacted a Voting Rights Act which effectively eliminated for a stated period of time all tests and similar devices which it found had been used to discriminate against minority groups, particularly black Americans. The same legislation authorized Federal officers to register voters and to observe elections in order to ensure that there was no discrimination. In 1970, Congress extended for an additional period of time the test suspension features of the 1965 Act; additionally removed unreasonable residence requirements as they applied to voting for President and Vice President; and enfranchised all citizens between 18 and 21. A short time later the Supreme Court held that Congress could lower the voting age only for Federal elections. This curtailment paved the way for rapid adoption of the 26th Amendment.

18. What Federal law regulates campaign financing?

Until 1972, the Corrupt Practices Acts regulated spending in Federal elections, but only for general and special elections. With passage of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, however, Congress provided for far greater regulation of spending in Federal elections. Replacing the Corrupt Practices Acts, the new law set a limitation on spending in primary, general, and special elections for broadcast and non-broadcast advertising by candidates; required all candidates for Federal office, and most campaign committees which solicit money on their behalf, to file reports with the Clerk of the House if candidates for the House, the Secretary of the Senate if candidates for the Senate, and the Comptroller General if candidates for President and Vice President. For the first time, summaries of amounts received and spent in campaigns must be published. The role that unions and corporations may play in campaigns is spelled out. In addition, the amount a candidate or his family may contribute to his campaign is limited to $50,000 for President or Vice President, $35,000 for Senator, and $25,000 for Representative.

19. Are political contributions tax deductible?

Yes. Beginning with 1972, political contributions for the first time could be deducted or else credited against tax owed to the Federal Government. Taxpayers who itemize may deduct up to $100 on a joint return; $50 on a single return. As an alternative, a taxpayer may credit against his tax owed up to a maximum of $25 on a joint return; $12.50 on any other return.

THE CONGRESS

20. What is the Congress?

The Congress of the United States is the legislative department of the National Government, in effect the National Legislature, and consists of two branches—the Senate and the House of Representatives.

12. How long may a proposed amendment remain outstanding and open to ratification?

The Supreme Court has stated that ratification must be within "some reasonable time after the proposal." Beginning with the 18th amendment it has been customary for Congress to set a definite period for ratification. In the case of the 18th, 20th, 21st, and 22d amendments, and the pending equal rights amendment, the period set was 7 years; but there has been no determination as to just how long a "reasonable time" might extend.

13. What is the "lame duck" amendment?

The 20th amendment to the Constitution, proclaimed by the Secretary of State on February 6, 1933, to have been ratified by sufficient States to make it a part of the Constitution. This amendment provides, among other things, that the terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on January 20; the terms of Senators and Representatives shall end at noon on January 3 instead of March 4, and the terms of their successors shall then begin. Prior to this amendment, the annual session of Congress began on the first Monday in December (Constitution, art. I, sec. 4). Since the terms of new members formerly began on March 4, this meant that members who had been defeated or did not stand for reelection in November continued to serve during the "lame duck" session from December through March 4. Adoption of the 20th amendment has not entirely obviated legislation by a Congress that does not represent the latest choice of the people. Seven sessions since 1933 have not adjourned sine die prior to the November general elections. The most recent Congress to extend beyond the November elections was the 91st Congress which adjourned on January 2, 1971.

THE ELECTORAL PROCESS

14. What is the electoral college?

The Constitution provides that each State "shall appoint * * * a number of electors" equal to the combined number of its Senators and Representatives and, in the 23d amendment, that the District of Columbia shall have as many electors as the least populous State (at present 3). In the 1972 presidential election, accordingly, 538 electors cast ballots for President and Vice President, with 270 necessary for election.

The framers of the Constitution thought that a convention of qualified electors would be the best way to choose a President. They contemplated that electors would not be pledged to any particular candidate but would calmly and wisely decide who should be President. The rapid development of political parties, however, nullified this notion and for many years the electoral college has simply ratified the choice of the voters in each State, although occasionally an elector will "bolt" and "vote his conscience."

The electors whose party wins in a State's balloting for President meet at a place designated by the State legislature, usually the State capital. They meet on the Monday following the second Wednesday in December in a presidential election year and vote as a unit for their candidate. Six copies of these votes are made. One is for the President of the United States Senate; 2 for the secretary of state; 2 for

2. There should be three branches of government—one to make the laws, another to execute them, and a third to settle questions of law.

3. All persons are equal before the law; and anyone, rich or poor, can demand the protection of the law in the exercise of his rights.

4. The Government is a government of laws, not of men. No one is above the law. No officer of the Government can use authority unless the Constitution or the law permits.

5. The people can change the authority of the Government by changing the Constitution. (One such change was the election of Senators by direct vote instead of by state legislatures.)

6. The Constitution, the Acts of Congress, and the treaties of the U.S. are law, the highest in the land. The national Government is a government of the people, and not of the states alone.

THE CONSTITUTION

6. What is the "supreme law of the land"?

The Constitution, laws of the United States made "in pursuance of" the Constitution, and treaties made under authority of the United States. Judges throughout the country are bound by them, regardless of anything in separate State constitutions or laws.

7. What is meant by the "separation of powers" in the Federal Government?

The Constitution contains provisions in separate articles for three great departments of government—legislative, executive, and judicial. There is a significant difference in the grants of power to these departments: The first article, treating of legislative power, vests in Congress "all legislative Powers herein granted"; the second article vests "the executive Power" in the President; and the third article states that "The judicial Power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." The theory of this separation of powers is that by keeping them independent of each other they are a check upon each other so that a tyrannous concentration of unchecked power is made impossible.

8. What is the Bill of Rights?

The first 10 amendments to the Constitution, adopted in 1791, are commonly referred to as the Bill of Rights. As a matter of fact, the first 8 really set out the substantive and procedural personal rights associated with that description, while 9 and 10 are general rules of interpretation of the relation between the State and Federal governments—all powers not delegated by the Constitution to the United States, nor prohibited to the States, being reserved to the States or the people.

9. What are the rights enumerated in the Bill of Rights?

It should be noted that the Bill of Rights is in form primarily a bill of "don'ts" for Congress—in other words, it is not a theoretical enumeration, but a series of prohibitions on the enactment by Congress of laws infringing certain rights. Aside from the three perhaps most
